The Great Emu War (1932)

In 1932, Australia faced a unique adversary: emus. - Government Response: In a bizarre attempt to control the emu population, the Australian government deployed soldiers armed with machine guns to combat the birds.
- Outcome: The military campaign was largely ineffective, as the emus proved to be agile and elusive. The soldiers' efforts resulted in only a few hundred emus being killed, leading to the eventual withdrawal of military forces.
